The seahorse is a very strange animal. It is a fish, but its head looks like a horse. The male takes care of the eggs until they hatch into baby fish. The seahorse swims “standing up.” Its eyes can move separately so it can see everywhere at the same time. Its mouth is at the end of its nose.

The female seahorse deposits her eggs in a small pouch under the male’s tail. Then she swims away and never sees the male or her babies again. Six weeks later, the baby fish are born.

Winds are nothing but moving air. Of course, the places where the winds occur and the time when they blow depend on many factors. For example, the light from the sun falls on the earth and warms it in some places more than others. This warmth causes the air to have upward currents and the air which is not warmed has to move in to replace it. Other factors for having winds are the clouds which prevent the heat of the sun from reaching the earth under them, and the sea which is warmed by the sunlight differently from land. Wind, as well as light, heat and sound are capable of doing many things. Scientists call these different forms of energy.
